

TV and radio ownership should not be limited to only a few companies whose only concerns deal with ratings and profits. Public service is essential and seems to be absent in programing today. So called "play lists" have ruined radio, and are the result of a few owners acquring many stations around the country. Even Barry Diller thinks that consolidation of media outlets into a few companies is dangerous for free ideas. It is scary to think of only a few companies owning radio, TV, wireless, newspapers, Internet and publishing.

So, do not allow them to merge; spread out the ownership. Have public hearings. Let people know what is going on. The airways are ours.
